Answers

ANIMALS

1. No

The slow worm is a legless lizard often mistaken for a snake. Unlike snakes, it has movable eyelids and can shed its tail when threatened.

2. Yes

They fed mainly on steppe grasses and, to a lesser extent, on herbs and shrubs. They plucked food with their prehensile trunks and ground it with their large molars.

3. 2

4. Yes

The koala is a marsupial – its young develops in the mother's pouch.

5. Yes

Yes. Both animals are mammals.

6. The rand

It is the currency of South Africa.

7. The United States

Despite its name, it is an American breed, also called the "Aussie".

8. Persian cat

9. A mammal

The saiga is an antelope of the bovid family, recognizable by its oversized, flexible, trunk-like nose. The nose filters sand and dust from the air during a gallop and warms the blood. Saigas once lived throughout Eurasia, as far as the British Isles.

10. Liger

The name combines the words "lion" and "tiger". The hybrid of a male tiger and a lioness, on the other hand, is a tigon.

11. A dog breed

It is a molosser-type dog.

12. Yes

The golden jackal lives in Europe. For a long time it was found only in the Balkans, but in the 20th century it spread into Central Europe. In Poland, the first individuals were photographed in 2015.

13. No

Although one might think that, given the length of its neck, a giraffe should have far more cervical vertebrae than a human, it turns out that it has exactly the same number – seven.

14. Reptiles and amphibians

Most often you can see snakes, lizards and iguanas there.

15. Storks

The marabou stork is a large scavenger of the stork family with a wingspan of up to 2.9 m. Because its wings and back look like a cloak, it is called the "undertaker bird". It is increasingly seen at African garbage dumps.

16. Australia

The tuatara is a reptile endemic to New Zealand – the only surviving member of the order Rhynchocephalia.

17. Poodle

18. An insect

Fleas are secondarily wingless. Their powerful legs allow them to make long jumps.

19. black

The Friesian horse is almost exclusively black.
